Obviously work hard and make sure you get grades that you're happy with, but remember that GCSEs aren't the be-all and end-all. Most universities don't really care what grades you got at GCSE as long as you've got your five pass grades (including English and Maths), and that your predicted grades for A-levels are good.

Ceasing to seek power over people and outcomes in your life is the first major step to living peacefully. Trying to control people is about seeking to impose your will and reality on others. But by doing so--even with the best of intentions--this forcing your will on others takes away the power from others and causes a great imbalance which can lead to anger, hurt, and resentment.

Use strong role models. Integrate role models from the community into your classroom. The more role models from different walks of life your students see, the more they will feel that a good attitude can apply to any situation. Bring in a policewoman or fireman from the community and have them discuss how they approach the difficult aspects of their jobs with a positive attitude.

Think: This Flurb needs to take two steps to get to the fruit. Work with your elbow partner to decide what you think those two steps are. Pair: Have students discuss with neighbors for about 90 seconds. Share: Ask a few students to describe their algorithm to the class. Move your finger along the displayed map as the students read their steps.
